[1] Barthélemy and his brother Jean Hervart, having, as bankers in Paris, made a large fortune, laid it at the feet of Lous XIII. at the critical period of the invasion of Alsace, thus enabling the King to retain 10,000 Swedish mercenaries in his army, and saving the State ; but the estates they received in return for these services were confiscated at the Revocation. They appear to have been of the same family as the Bavarian Chancellor, Jean Georges Herwart de Hohenbourg, who died circa 1625.

[2] Buried "in the new vault in the North aisle of the monuments, between S. Paul's and Edward the Confessor's Chapels." Cf. Colonel Chester's 'Westminster Abbey Registers,' p. 242.

[3] Rosine de Graffenried in her will names, besides her nephew Ralph de Luterman, "MM. Michael Frederick and Sigismund Cerjat, both children of M. Dedenesy," in terms which imply that there was already a relationship between them. While, as is seen, Sigismund Cerjat afterwards married her grand-daughter, his sister Ursula Frances Cerjat wove the ties connecting the two families still closer by becoming the wife of Francis Louis de Graffenried of Berne, and to him adm'on was granted in the P.C.C. to her estate 26 Feb. 1731.

[4] Baron d'Hervart, having been appointed by the new King to the post of British Resident at Geneva, seems (although in the first instance the Genevese, through fear of a complete rupture with their powerful French neighbour, refused to receive him) to have abode there until, on his appointment as Ambassador to the Swiss Cantons, he removed to Berne. The little town of Vevay, on the other hand, conferred on him the bourgeoisie, a privilege bestowed during upwards of a century on only thirty-two French Refugees. Apparently he remained as British Minister until the death of William III. in 1702, although Weiss, who calls him Herwart-Desmaretz, dates his services as from 1689 to 1697. It was in 1695 that the plan of establishing Vaudois Colonies in Germany was devised and carried out by him. Of his later private life little or no record remains beyond that found in the Register of God's House, Southampton, which runs as follows :—

"1721. Monsieur Philibert d'Hervart, baron d'Hunninghen, francois refugié mourut en cette ville, le 30 Avril, 1721, aagé de 76 ans et fut enterré dans l'eglise paroissiale d'Holirood auprès de Mr Frederic d'Hervart son fils, le mercredy suivant, son corps étant conduit à la sepulture par tous les ministres Francois et Anglois de cette ville, et de Ste Mary, et par une grande multitude de francois et d'Anglois. Sous le regne de Guillaume troisiesme il fut envoyé extraordinaire a Genêve, en Suisse, etc., et s'étant retiré en cette ville il y a laissé des marques de sa grande charité pour les pauvres, en laissant à cette église un billet de £32 . 5 sterl. plus par testament £50 sterlin, aussy bien que de son zéle pour la gloire de dieu, en laissant pour l'entretien du ministere de cette eglise la somme du £12 sterlin de rente, il avoit donné il y a viron 8 mois quatre mille livres sterlin à l'hôpital des françois refugiés du London volgairement apellé la providence. Les pauvres des deux nations Françoise et Angloise perdent beaucoup a sa mort, dieu veuille avoir pitié deux, et leur susciter des personnes aussy charitables. Dispersit, dedit pauperibus, justitia ejus manet in sæculum sæculi."

[5] The position and popularity this grande dame, "the most charming, agreeable woman in the world," enjoyed in London Society are witnessed to by contemporary diarists such as Evelyn and Mary, Countess Cowper. For the inventory annexed to her will of her jewels, pictures (which include portraits of her parents by Mignard, and of Lord and Lady Eland by Sir G. Kneller), and china, see Agnew's 'Protestant Exiles,' where it occupies no less than four pages and a half (iii., 199-204).

[6] Jacques Philippe d'Hervart presumably was sent, in compliance with his father's will, to Holland, to his mother's first cousins, Lieut.-Colonel des Utins and Major de Corsié, both of the Swiss regiment of Chambrier, "there to learn the Art of Warr the only profession of a gentleman who in these unfortunate times can scarce apply himselfe to anything else. He is born a Swiss and subject to their Excellencies of Berne, and may be advanced in the regiments not those styled regiments of Berne, in which the citizens of Berne only may be admitted." Forty years later we find that he had disposed of his Chateau d'Hauteville, near Vevay, to a Pierre Philippe Carmac, whose daughter and heir conveyed it to her husband, M. Grand, grandfather to Gonsalve d'Hauteville, the present proprietor, and to Leonce Grand d'Hauteville, who mar., as above, a dau. of J. P. d'Hervart's great-nephew, Lieut.-Colonel C. S. Cerjat.

[7] Madame Jacques d'Hervart was probably dau. of Abraham Duurz, a merchant of Amsterdam, whose portrait exists at Nostell Priory.

[8] The 'Gentleman's Magazine' for 1802 (lxxii., 2, 688) records that J. F. Maximilian Cerjat "had married an English lady of large fortune." She was probably born in London, where her parents (both of them related to the Girardots), natives of Paris, were married at the French Chapel in Spring Gardens 9 Oct. 1728.

[9] A sister of Captain Henry Bristow married Tillieux Girardot, who was Director of 'La Providence' from 1770 to 1793, and another sister became second wife of the first, and mother of the third, Lord Lyttelton. The Bristows also intermarried with Debonnaire.

[10] The children of Lieut.-Colonel Charles Sigismund Cerjat are known as de Cerjat, the recognition of their right in the prefix to the surname proper having been obtained from the authorities of the Canton de Vaud. This pedigree records six of the Seigneuries by which they have been distinguished as the Cerjats de Bressonay, de Denesay, de St. Leger, de Syens, de Moudon, and d'Allaman.

[11] Information in regard to M. de Mey would be gratefully welcomed. Sabine Lizette d'Hervart's great-uncle, Daniel Cerjat, had in 1669 m. Ursula, dau. of Volfgang Mey, and about that date a Barthélemy May (Galiffe's 'Familles Genevoises,' iv., 282) held the Seigneurie of Huningen.
